

Thirteen Syrian Mig 21s downed

Israeli jet lost, pilot is rescued

By HIRSH GOODMAN, Jerusalem Post Military Correspondent
Thirteen Syrian fighter planes were downed by Israel Air Force Phantoms and Mirages yesterday when they attempted to interfere with an IAF Mediterranean patrol, and with a subsequent rescue mission.

An Israel Mirage was hit but its pilot, who bailed out over the sea, was picked up safely by an Israel rescue helicopter. The same helicopter also picked up a Syrian pilot seen in the sea about a kilometre from the Israeli. The Syrian is now in hospital, having swallowed large quantities of sea water.

O.C. Air Force Ahuf Binayim Peled said last night that a group of 16 Syrian Mig 21s attacked an Israel patrol of four planes some 150 sea miles north of Haifa and 25 kilometres north-west of the Syrian port of Latakia. The Israelis were over international waters some 20 miles off the Syrian coast.

Within a few minutes, the patrol, assisted by an eight-plane covering force, had disposed of nine of the interceptors. The pilot of the Israeli plane that was hit managed to glide out to sea and ejected himself 10 miles from the scene of the dogfight. He spent two hours in the water before being picked up by a rescue helicopter.

Several Syrian Mig 21s attempted to interfere with the rescue operation and four of them were shot down. This clash lasted four-five minutes. It took place at a medium height and between 10 and 20 miles out at sea.

The helicopter pilot related that he had considerable difficulty in rescuing the Syrian, who did not seem properly trained in sea rescue operations. The draft from the helicopter rotor caped his rubber raft and two men had to get down into the water in order to pick him up.

The downed Israel pilot told reporters that he was not sure whether his craft had been hit by cannon fire or an air-to-air missile. "It happened after I shot down a Mig. I just knew I had been hit. I tried to fly on, but I soon saw that my engine was on fire and that I would have to abandon the plane. I glided out to sea for about 10 miles and then ejected at 10,000 feet."

He said that at no time did he have any doubt that he would be rescued. For the two hours he was in the water waiting for the helicopter, he did not come under Syrian attack.

The Syrian Air Force maintained a large force in the skies throughout. Observers could point to no logical reason for the Syrians having attacked the IAF reconnaissance patrol. "All we know is that they fielded a huge number of planes," one source said.

"They seemed deliberately to pick a fight. They fielded a huge number of planes and made sure a dogfight was unavoidable."

Syria's loss of 13 aircraft all by cannon or air-to-air missiles is the largest in one day since the Six Day War. It brings to 60 the number of Syrian aircraft destroyed since the war. Six Mig 21s were downed at no cost to Israel on January 8.

Rifai, a former Premier and a cousin of Jordan's present Prime Minister Zaid Rifai, has been credited with taking an active part in the reconciliation efforts with Egypt and Syria.

Arab reaction is low-keyed, shocked

Jerusalem Post Arab Affairs Reporter
Syria last night admitted losing eight Mig-21 jets, but claimed its air force has downed five Israeli planes.

The Syrians evidently downplayed the aerial combat, whose outcome appeared to have shocked Damascus. Other Arab capitals quoted the Damascus reaction to the action in a muted tone: Syria and neighbouring Lebanon closed down their air space throughout the combat.

"OVER COASTAL AREA" Syrian comment was low-keyed in contrast to past encounters. They reported the fighting in a brief military communiqué saying that Syrian fighters took to the air after "large formations of enemy planes, totalling 64 in all, violated our air space over the coastal area."

Following a three-hour dogfight, the Syrians said eight of their planes were "hit," a vague claim that five Israeli jets were shot down.

Most of the Syrian planes which were hit crashed along the coastal area. One pilot was rescued at sea by the Israelis, while another was picked up in Lebanon by a Lebanese helicopter. The pilot was reportedly taken to a Beirut hospital, where he was visited last night by Lebanese Prime Minister Takiyeddin Solh.

Airliners taking off from Beirut as the battle began were told to change course to avoid Israeli jets over the Mediterranean, airport sources said. The airport was later shut down for two hours.

Several hours after the combat, Syria's Assistant Foreign Minister Mohammed Zakaria Issam summoned all foreign ambassadors accredited to Damascus to warn them of the "grave consequences of Israel's latest aggression on Syria."

In Cairo, a government source said President Anwar Sadat followed closely the developments of the air fighting and received "successive and detailed reports on the situation. Urgent contacts were also held between the Egyptian and Syrian military commands, the source said."

He said despite the "Israeli provocative, sudden and premeditated aggression, Syrian pilots have shown complete alertness and great courage" in the fighting.

SYRIA'S AIR FORCE
Syria has 326 Soviet-built combat aircraft in its air force, according to the London-based Institute for Strategic Studies.

The air force includes 200 Mig-21 interceptors, 80 Mig-17 ground attack aircraft, 30 SU-7 fighter bombers and some Ilyushin light bombers, the Institute said in its report for this month.

There are believed to be many military depots around Tartous, Syria's second port after Latakia on the Mediterranean.

ATTEMPT TO MOLLIFY BEN-AHARON

Reiterates intention of resigning

Jerusalem Post Political Reporter
EL AVIV. — The Labour Party leadership yesterday went out of its way to mollify Histadrut Secretary-General Yitzhak Ben-Aharon and reassure him that no one held him in any way personally responsible for the drop in labour alignment votes at the Histadrut elections.

This point was stressed by speakers at the post-mortem on the Histadrut elections at the Labour Party Leadership Bureau's weekly meeting. Premier Golda Meir stressed that the losses were of the party and not of any individual and both she and Finance Minister Pinhas Sapir agreed that the election results must be analyzed in detail and necessary conclusions drawn for the Knesset election campaign.

Mr. Sapir, for his part, was optimistic as far as the Knesset election forecast was concerned. They all resolved to get down to work immediately and put the Knesset election campaign machinery into top gear.

Mr. Abudut, Ha'avoda's already departing its influence to try and counter pressure from ex-Mapai to remove Ben-Aharon from the Histadrut. The Kibbutz Hameuhad secretary convened yesterday with Ben-Aharon to advise him against any hasty moves. Minister (without portfolio) Israel Galili said a movement had the fullest confidence in Ben-Aharon as Secretary.

Mrs. Meir to speak in Europe Assembly Oct. 1

TRASBOURG (UPI). — Prime Minister Golda Meir will address the European Council of Europe Constitutive Assembly on October 1 to explain Israel's position on the Middle East crisis, Council officials said yesterday.

Mrs. Meir will take part in the general political debates at the House of Europe, seat of the Assembly. The Council invited for each session a foreign statesman to take part in the discussion of a particular problem. Last year the European legislators listened to an address by Minister Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan.

Mrs. Meir is expected to arrive at a private plane on September 30 and return home on October 2.

JUNTA APPOINTS CHILE PRESIDENT, BREAKS CUBA TIES

SANTIAGO (AP). — The Chilean military junta named army chief General Augusto Pinochet Ugarte as President yesterday, formed a Cabinet and broke diplomatic relations with Cuba in a sharp reversal of the country's foreign policy.

A round-the-clock curfew, in effect since Tuesday, was lifted at noon for 6 1/2 hours so civilians could leave their homes to purchase food and other necessities.

The curfew had been so strictly enforced in this city of three million — nearly a third of the national population — that civilians could not leave their homes even to borrow a cup of sugar from a next-door neighbour.

But a new flurry of shooting broke out downtown at noon and only a handful of pedestrians ventured into the streets there. Troops have been fighting for three days against soldiers and other armed supporters of Salvador Allende, Chile's first Marxist President.

A communiqué broadcast on the State radio network appealed to Chileans to go to medical centres during the 6 1/2 hours of no curfew to donate blood "of whatever type."

The appeal followed unofficial reports that 500 to 1,000 people have died and nearly 10,000 have been wounded in fighting since Tuesday morning, when a coup toppled Allende's three-year-old government.

The military authorities in charge of the only radio network on the air, have not mentioned casualty figures. Gen. Pinochet became President of the four-man junta and swore in a 15-member Cabinet composed mostly of military.

Rear-Admiral Amador Hurtado, the new Foreign Minister, advised the Cuban Ambassador, Mario Garcia Machado, that the junta in one of its first acts, broke diplomatic relations with Cuba. Machado and 180 members of his mission drove to Fudahual international airport during the night and left for Havana in a Soviet airliner.

One of Allende's three daughters, Beatriz, left with the delegation, which includes her Cuban husband, Luis Fernandez Oña, the Embassy's first secretary.

Allende's widow, Hortensia, her two other married daughters and four grandchildren received asylum in the Mexican Embassy, the Mexican Government announced yesterday. They are to leave for Mexico City on Friday aboard a Mexican plane.

In Washington, the White House said yesterday that President Nixon had been receiving reports "for more than a year" relating to unrest in Chile, but that he had "no advance knowledge of any specific plans" for the coup that toppled Allende.

Deputy press secretary Gerald Warren thus turned aside reports that the U.S. Government had been told of the impending coup and did nothing to warn the Allende government. The presidential spokesman added that the U.S. Embassy in Santiago "was instructed to have nothing to do with persons approaching them in this regard, and those instructions were followed carefully."

The Post's Diplomatic Reporter added: Reports reaching Jerusalem say that all the Israelis in Chile are well, despite the recent convulsions in Santiago and the provincial towns.

Syrian pilot in Haifa hospital

Jerusalem Post Reporter
HAIFA. — The Syrian pilot who was rescued by the Air Force from the Mediterranean was taken to the Rambam Government Hospital by helicopter at 5.15 yesterday afternoon. He was put into a room in the recovery ward on the second floor, under heavy guard.

He was reported last night to be in fairly good condition. Neither his name nor rank was revealed.

Newsmen and photographers who tried to get into the ward were stopped by an Army major in front of the entrance while several soldiers could be seen on guard inside the door. The major said no information would be issued until this morning.

Syria seen resuming Jordan ties

Jerusalem Post Arab Affairs Reporter
SYRIA was expected to announce the resumption of its relations with Jordan over the weekend, Damascus reports said yesterday. The Syrian move would follow a similar Egyptian step announced on Wednesday night.

The Egyptian and the Syrian decisions to resume their diplomatic relations followed Wednesday's conclusion of the summit held by Egyptian President Anwar Sadat, Syrian President Hafiz Assad and Jordanian King Hussein in Cairo.

Meanwhile, Sadat was yesterday reported to have accepted the nomination of King Hussein's personal representative, Abdul-Monem Rifai, as Jordan's new ambassador to Cairo.

Rifai, a former Premier and a cousin of Jordan's present Prime Minister Zaid Rifai, has been credited with taking an active part in the reconciliation efforts with Egypt and Syria.

Glasgow Jewish bagpipers here

A Jewish bagpipe orchestra from Glasgow, probably the only one of its kind, arrived here aboard an El Al plane from London last night to take part in the Three-Day March.

The orchestra, consisting of 18 men and girls, aged between 12 and 24, marched out of the passenger terminal to their bus playing their bagpipes to the sound of applause by the people present there.

Plane-making go-ahead for Aircraft Industries

Jerusalem Post Aviation Correspondent
TEL AVIV. — Israel Aircraft Industries got the go-ahead yesterday to build additional series of Arava and West Wind aircraft. The decision by the Ministerial Economic Committee appears to have cleared the way for IAI's continued expansion.

The request for authorization of the new series came from Defence Minister Moshe Dayan, under whose office IAI nominally falls.

While no IAI spokesmen were prepared to comment officially on the decision, The Jerusalem Post learns that it comes just in time. It means that it can go on making the Arava and West Wind for the foreseeable future.

The company's entire production of the short-takeoff-and-landing, two-engined Arava has been spoken for the whole of next year. The 20 aircraft involved are all going to Mexico and Latin America. Later, local sales will probably include an initial two test planes for Arava and possibly some for the Air Force, though the army has so far taken only one plane to try out, and reportedly has been dissatisfied with it.

The West Wind, a local stretch development of the Jet Commodore eight seater jet, retails for $800,000. It is currently undergoing trial flights with the U.S. Coast Guard after reaching the "finals" in a long series of elimination-tests against similar planes made by some of the world's leading aircraft manufacturers.

IAI has just completed setting up a network of retailers throughout the U.S. for this twin engine executive jet. While no figures of sales were available here yesterday, it is understood that the production line has long since past its economic break-even point because of the low initial development price (it was purchased at $1.2 million from North American Rockwell).

MEIR T.V. INTERVIEW

Soviets warn Israel to end war against terrorists abroad

MOSCOW. — The Soviet Union warned Israel yesterday to end its war against Arab terrorists abroad. "Sovetskaya Rossiya," a newspaper of the Communist Party Central Committee, said:

"The Israeli rulers are wrong if they think they will be able to commit endless crimes in European countries with impunity, violate generally recognized standards of international law, take piratical actions in the air and continue to occupy Arab lands."

The article was in response to recent statements by Israeli Premier Golda Meir. Mrs. Meir said Israel would continue to capture and force down foreign passenger planes if it was considered necessary for national survival.

The Soviet newspaper said this was "fresh evidence of Israel's intention to continue to ignore world public opinion."

In a U.S. television programme aired yesterday, Mrs. Meir reiterated her statement and said that the condemnation by the U.N. Security Council of the hijacking of an Iraqi airliner over Lebanese airspace on August 10 was actually "encouraging terror."

Mrs. Meir said there was "no doubt" that the action was in defence of Israel's life. Asked "Will you continue these sorts of acts?" Mrs. Meir replied: "There is no doubt."

Mrs. Meir minimised reports that an energy crisis might force the U.S. to modify its support of Israel in order to assure supplies of oil from the Arab states. She said she thought the U.S. energy crisis was greatly exaggerated.

"I cannot believe that the U.S. Government, nor the American people, would sell out Israel for oil," she told Barbara Walters on the NBC-TV programme "Today."

Mrs. Meir said in the interview, filmed August 13 in Jerusalem: "I know the American people, I've been brought up in that country. The question is, what are the Arabs going to do with their oil? Will they drink it?" Mrs. Meir asked.

Iraq blamed for terrorist kidnapping of Saudi envoys

BEIRUT (UPI). — Kuwaiti authorities are convinced that Iraq was behind the five gunmen who held four Saudi Arabian diplomats hostage for 8½ hours late last week, the newspaper "Al Nahar" said yesterday.

The gunmen flew with their four Saudi diplomat hostages from the Saudi Arabian Embassy in Paris and surrendered peacefully on Saturday to Kuwaiti authorities.

"Al Nahar," quoting reports reaching diplomatic quarters in Beirut, said "An Arab country neighbouring Kuwait was behind the operation." Kuwaiti Arab neighbours are Saudi Arabia and Iraq.

Investigation of the five gunmen has revealed that the leader of the group was code-named "Doo-tor," and was employed in a pharmacy in the unnamed neighbouring country, the newspaper said.

During the investigations, the newspaper said, the leader of the group confessed that his plan was to lengthen the operations until the end of the "non-aligned" conference in Algiers. The fact the operation coincided with the Algiers conference was taken by terrorist chief Yasser Arafat as a personal insult to him and the Palestinian presence at the conference, "Al Nahar" said.

The newspaper did not name the "neighbouring Arab state" involved in the operation, but said "the fact that relations between Kuwait and this state are very sensitive may lead to Kuwait's decision not to put the five gunmen on trial."

Political sources said the "Al Nahar" report strongly pointed a finger at Iraq being the country behind the gunmen.

Relations between Iraq and Ku-

Scheel says M.E. scene may freeze

By BRIAN ARTHUR

Jerusalem Post Correspondent

BONN. — Foreign Minister Walter Scheel yesterday gently nudged the Arab States and Israel to seize the initiative towards finding new solutions to the Middle East conflict.

Otherwise, Mr. Scheel warned, the "course of world politics" might pass over problems of the area in favour of the status quo.

The German minister was speaking at a dinner given in his honour here yesterday by Bonn's Arab Ambassadors, presided over by Jordanian envoy Nijmeddin Dajani.

Mr. Scheel mentioned neither the Arabs nor Israel by name in his remarks, merely speaking generally of the value of "developing one's own initiatives and ways" towards a peaceful Middle East settlement.

But informed Bonn Government sources interpreted this clearly as referring to both the Arabs and Israel.

The Foreign Minister was defending application to the Middle East of the "method" of Chancellor Willy Brandt's historic "Ostpolitik," of taking the decisive steps toward overcoming the barriers between East and West Europe.

'Arab plot to hijack London airport bus'

The London "Daily Mail" reported yesterday that Scotland Yard has received information that a unit of 28 Arab terrorists left Lebanon for Europe this week, to carry out sabotage activity on the eve of Rosh Hashana.

One of their plots was said to be to hijack a bus carrying passengers from West London to Heathrow Airport.

Acting on this information, detectives surrounded a bus carrying passengers for Air France flight 606, just as it was about to leave the West London airline terminal, at 10 a.m. on Wednesday.

They separated eight Arab passengers, bound for Cairo, but searched thoroughly in all the passengers' luggage. Nothing suspicious was found, and all were released — the eight after being questioned for three hours.

wait have been sensitive for some time over a joint border conflict. A visit to Kuwait by Iraqi Foreign Minister Murtada Salih Abdel Baki in August proved inconclusive, and relations between the two countries are still cool, political sources said.

In Kuwait yesterday, the local director of the Palestine Liberation Organization discussed the affair with two government ministers. But there was no word on the Kuwaiti inquiry into the identities and backers of the five kidnappers. Investigations were still in progress, the government said.

The P.O. director, Ali Yasin, called on the acting Prime Minister, Defence and Interior Minister Sheikh Saad al Abdullah, for discussions said simply to have covered "matters relating to the gunmen."

Murder victim in Denmark may be Arab worker

COPENHAGEN (UPI). — Police said yesterday they had found a young man, who appeared to be a South European or an Arab, axed to death outside Copenhagen.

The man, who was believed to be between 25 and 30 years old, had been bound and gagged and then "tortured and killed with knives and axes," a spokesman said. "It was an outright liquidation."

The man carried no passport or other identification documents.

Police said they were investigating whether the killing had any connection with the current visit to Denmark by Yigal Allon, Israel's Deputy Prime Minister.

"Another possibility is that the man is a guest worker," the spokesman said.

Tension between guest workers and motorized Danish youths, so called "Wild Angels," has been running high in recent months in Denmark, particularly in the town of Helsingør, 35 km. away from where the body was found.

A few months ago one guest worker knifed and wounded a Dane, and since then the "Wild Angels" have threatened to take their revenge.

Brandt rebuked for 'pussyfooting' on Soviet dissidents

BONN (Reuters). — West German Chancellor Willy Brandt came under fire yesterday from the parliament opposition and author Guenter Grass over his stand on Soviet treatment of dissident intellectuals.

The opposition's parliamentary leader, Dr. Karl Carstens, challenged Mr. Brandt's assertion at a press conference on Wednesday that attempts to influence internal developments in other countries amounted to a violation of the principle of non-interference.

Dr. Carstens said it could not be considered interference if one criticised the violation of human rights in other countries. It had long been accepted that "human rights take priority over a State's rights of sovereignty."

In an article that did not mention Brandt by name but left little doubt about its intended target, Mr. Grass — a close personal friend of the Chancellor — wrote that detente with the Soviet Union should not have to mean "pussyfooting" where its treatment of dissidents was concerned.

"Even if we can hardly help the embattled writers and scientists directly, we cannot just remain silent and watch," he said.

But his remarks were unlikely to placate critics of the Christian Democrat and Social Democrat like Mr. Grass who feel Brandt has not made sufficient of his stature as Chancellor of the Soviet leadership, said Dr. Kissinger in deploring "a lack of basic rights" in the Union.

Mr. Brandt, speaking during debates after the summer sought to answer these by saying there was a "methods which work in a way."

As he did on Wednesday quoted approvingly the put forward by U.S. Sec State-designate Henry Kiss that trying to change the structure of other countries' contradiction of the non-int principle.

The Chancellor, who has said that his views on culture and science are "the Soviet leadership," said Dr. Kissinger in deploring "a lack of basic rights" in the Union.

Bourguiba backs Arab fighters

TUNIS (UPI). — Tunisian President Habib Bourguiba has told Kuwaiti ruler Sheikh Sabah as-Salem as-Sabah that the Middle East deadlock can be broken only by the intervention of Soviet Russia and the U.S., plus U.S. pressure on Israel. The remarks were contained in a toast made Wednesday night during a banquet for the Kuwaiti ruler who is here on an official four-day visit.

Bourguiba condemned Israel for what he called "expansionist designs."

He said "The problem cannot move out of deadlock short of a decisive intervention of the two superpowers and above all of the one superpower capable of putting pressure on Israel to make it recover common sense and force it to accept a compromise solution."

"But this could come about only if the Arabs maintain their solidarity and their support for their brethren, the 'Palestinian combatants', whatever may be the cost."

Swedish King worse

STOCKHOLM (UPI). — King Gustav VI's condition worsened rapidly yesterday, and his personal physicians said the 90-year-old monarch had slipped into a deep sleep. The entire royal family gathered at his bedside last night.

The Yemens agree to end hostilities

BEIRUT (Reuters). — The heads of North and South Yemen agreed yesterday to end acts of aggression against one another to create "the appropriate climate" for union. The Iraq News Agency, in a dispatch from Aden, said the two leaders issued a joint statement to this effect on talks they held in Aden where they attended the non-aligned summit.

The statement said Kadi Abdul Rahman al-Iryani, head of state of the (North) Yemen Arab Republic, and Salem Robaya Ali, his counterpart in the People's Democratic Republic of (South) Yemen, agreed to put an end to all acts of military training and subversion directed against each other. They also decided not to encourage or allow saboteurs to act against each other.

You don't have to be Jewish...

NEW YORK (AP). — Who is that Arab growling from the cover of the current "Newsweek" magazine, crediting a service station pump nozzle in his arms and with the words "Arab oil squeeze" above his shoulder?

It's Steve Kaye, a 33-year-old New York talent agent, who happens to be Jewish.

"The search for an Arab came through my organization," Kaye said on Wednesday. "We couldn't find an Arab, so I volunteered."

Dressed in Arab robes and wearing an Arab headress he bought during a visit to Israel, Kaye was photographed for the cover at a service station in the Borough of Queens.

"It took hours to get that mean expression," Kaye said. "There were some funny shots, and they chose the meanest one."

N.Y. gives life term to drug dealer U.S. may use tax loan to halt inflation

NEW YORK (AP). — A Federal judge has invoked a tough new law, sentencing Herbert Sperling, a major narcotics dealer, to life imprisonment and fining him $300,000.

U.S. District Court Judge Milton Pollack imposed the sentence on Wednesday, saying "If the seemingly endless battle against narcotics is to be won, we must deal severely with defendants like this." He invoked a new Federal law against conducting a continuing drug trade with five or more other persons.

Sperling, 34, was convicted on July 12 of conspiring to operate a major narcotics ring that supplied heroin and cocaine to addicts in New York City. Ten members of the ring were sentenced to terms ranging from three to 12 years.

BAKLADESH. — Canada will lend Bangladesh $8m. to finance completion of that country's first earth satellite station. It will be the terminal for Bangladesh's overseas communications.

WASHINGTON (AP). — President Nixon is considering proposing a temporary 10 per cent income tax surcharge in a move against inflation, Presidential counselor Melvin Laird said yesterday.

Laird said that receipts from the tax increase would be refunded later when the economy cools.

He also stressed that Nixon had made no final decision, but said such proposals "are being given consideration."

The President also is considering a proposal for a variable investment tax credit for corporations, Laird said. This tentative plan could give the President authority to adjust the tax credit annually at a rate ranging from four per cent to 15 per cent.

The tentative 10 per cent figure would apply to current income tax rates — not to taxable income. In other words, an individual now taxed at a 20 per cent rate would find his taxes going to 22 per cent — not to 30 per cent.

HOW TO POLLUTE A PARADISE

ONE morning early last month a huge black blot appeared on the blue translucent waters of the Bay of Eilat, some two or three kilometres north of the resort settlement of Neviot. The young moshav members watched helplessly as the north wind and the current brought it to the shore, where it settled, a belt of thick, oily sludge, two metres wide and three centimetres thick, along almost ten kilometres of golden beaches.

Neviot, the first moshav south of Eilat to be settled after the Six Day War, is located between the Be'er Sheva and Nuweiba El-Muzaili. The settlement plans to base its economy on tourism and agriculture, and the location is ideal: a shallow bay sheltered from the north wind, lined by beaches, dotted with palms, and with untouched coral reefs just a few metres from the shore. Fresh water comes from the nearby Wadi Waur which gets the runoff from winter rains. Now three years old and thriving, Neviot became the latest victim of the "energy crisis."

Captain Rafael Spinhath, the Ministry of Transport's shipping commissioner in Eilat, inspects the oil flow — to see whether it goes into the 42 inch pipeline from Eilat to Ashkelon or into the sea as the tankers unload their cargo. Captain Spinhath was on holiday when the oil that spoiled the beaches of Neviot appeared, and his deputy who was on duty in Eilat admits they do not yet know the source of the oil, which was probably from a tanker en route to Eilat. "Such a large spill is very rare," he told The Post "and it is most unlikely that it could have come from the oil port in Eilat, a distance of 75 kms. without hitting the shore before it reached Neviot."

What happens when there is an oil spill?

Captain Spinhath says "there is constant, 24-hour-a-day surveillance.

Sheila Meltzer
Eilat

"During daylight hours our jeep patrols the shoreline and during the night a contractor has a boat at sea patrolling the oil harbour area. Speed is of the utmost importance in dealing with a spill once it is reported and located. Now that the courts are allowed to impose fines up to IL150,000 on ships that cause pollution with a possible one-year jail sentence for the captain or seaman responsible, the tankermen are becoming their own watchdogs. Especially since the ship itself reports spillage it can be fined between IL3,000 to IL37,000 depending on the tonnage, without a court case. Repeated pollution by the same ships, of course, brings correspondingly heavier fines."

Stiff penalties

These stiff new penalties, however helpful as a deterrent, are still negligible sums for the shipping companies involved in the oil carrying business, and pollution still occurs frequently. As soon as a spill is reported to Captain Spinhath's office, the Eilat-Ashkelon pipeline company is notified, as it is responsible for limiting the spread of the pollution — and cleaning it up.

The pipeline company also has a contractor for this job. His first step is to spray the spill with oil detergent — but this can only be done while the spill is in the oil harbour area because the detergent is even more harmful to the coral and sea-life than the oil itself.

(Recent research has shown that oil may be the least harmful of the pollutants affecting this nature reserve — the phosphates stored, loaded and split in the Port of Eilat is Enemy No. 1, according to Dr. Fischelson of Tel Aviv University, followed by the oil-detergent detergents in use to clean up the spill.)

Following the spraying, special sponges which repel water and absorb oil are strung out in the direction of the current in order to trap the oil before it reaches the shore. A new method, called the "slicer" has also just recently been put into use. This is a machine placed at the front of a boat which resembles a mangle. A special absorbent material, similar to a large towel, revolves on a roller, absorbing the polluted water, and then passes through the "mangle" which squeezes the oil into a tank in the boat. This is a slow process, however, which can take days to clean up a spill.

If all these measures fail to stop the oil before it reaches the shore, where (especially in the case of the nature reserve at Coral Beach) it then sticks to the beach rocks from which it cannot be cleaned, straw is scattered over the oil to absorb it and is then collected when it washes up on the beach.

The stable door

Obviously something is being done, but at the moment most of the efforts are like closing the stable door after the horse has bolted. In order to save the Red Sea, one of the last almost-clean seas left in the world, the Ministry of Transport has ordered a research study on methods to fight pollution from an American company, but it too concentrates on repairing damage already done.

Because of the "energy crisis," the importance of the Eilat-Ashkelon pipeline has assumed even greater importance — the influential London "Observer" recently called it "the world's most important oil conduit." So it is likely that the tanker traffic in the Bay of Eilat will not decrease. In fact the pipeline company may install a third pumping jetty, at a cost of $27m.

Men on the job here accuse the pipeline company itself of being responsible for most of the oil spillage because of faulty connections, pipe bursts, and, if not actual negligence, "human error." The Municipality of Eilat and the Civil Authority for the Shlomo Region (responsible for the area from Eilat down to Sharm el-Sheikh) have no say whatsoever in the affairs of the pipeline company, which is the favoured child of the Ministry of Finance.

At a meeting held in Eilat last month sponsored by the local branches of the Society for the Preservation of Nature and the Nature Reserves Authority, a resolution was unanimously passed calling on the Municipality of Eilat and its residents to exert every pressure not to allow the building of the proposed new jetty until a suitable location is agreed upon which will ensure the fullest possible control against oil spillage and the most effective and efficient methods of cleaning it up in case it should occur. The public committee elected at this meeting already has detailed proposals for both, which they will place before the company. It is up to the residents of Eilat — and Israelis who want to have one clean sea left for their children, if not for themselves — to support them.

Riggs: 'I'll bewitch Billie-Jean King'

Sports Abroad

John Wosner

CONFIDENT Bobby Riggs claimed this week Billie-Jean King lost her concentration and title in the U.S. Open because she was worrying about him and their $100,000 winner-take-all tennis match next week.

"Billie Jean King was looking past Forest Hills to me," the loquacious Riggs said. "She is uptight and worrying all the time. She just might win one set. She'll be so bothered, bewitched, confused and bewildered. She would turn in all her Wimbledon and (U.S.) Open titles just to defeat me."

Ms. King, 29, defeated to Julie Heldman in the U.S. Open last week. She had been ill several days and nearly fainted in the oppressive east coast heat before withdrawing.

Riggs, a 55-year-old whose white hair is dyed dark red, and Ms. King will play the best three of five sets in their September 20 match. They will play in the air-conditioned stadium before an expected 45,000 spectators and a worldwide television audience. Riggs believes conditions will be good for his "women's rights" opponent.

Riggs defeated Margaret Court Smith of Australia in straight sets in a $10,000 Mother's Day match. He had challenged Billie Jean for years, maintaining women's tennis cannot be compared to the men's style. Billie Jean finally accepted Riggs' challenge after capturing her fifth Wimbledon singles title and the promoters hiked the purse to $100,000.

SOCCER

LONDON United won their sixth game of the season on Tuesday night to keep their 100 per cent record intact and lead the English First Division table by two points.

Their latest victims were Wolves, whom they beat 2-0 at Wolverhampton with a perfect display of power.

In other mid-week games, Spurs gained a valuable point at Burnley with a 2-2 draw while Arsenal scored their second victory of the season with a 1-0 home win against Sheffield United.

Liverpool, the reigning champions, crashed 1-3 at Derby while Coventry continued their good start to the season with a 2-1 win over Manchester City. Manchester United, whose troublesome star George Best has returned to training, were again beaten at home, this time 2-1 by Leicester.

Leeds lead the table with 12 points, followed by Burnley with 10, while Coventry, Leicester and Derby all have nine. At the bottom of the table Birmingham have one point. West Ham have three and Chelsea and Manchester United four apiece.

MURRAY ZUCKOFF examines the effects of the military takeover in Chile.

THE COUP AND THE JEWS

FOR the first time in 46 years changes introduced by the Allende military junta is ruling Chile. What does this development mean for the approximately 25,000 Jews, more than half of whom came to Chile less than 40 years ago, or were born in the country and never knew the meaning of a military regime? What does it mean for the Jews who were part of the Allende Government and Cabinet? What does the new situation mean in terms of Chile — Israel diplomatic relations?

Some may return

It is even likely that some of the 5,000 Jews who left Chile and did not return after Salvador Allende became President may now come back. At this, of course, is predicated on the assumption that the junta is itself not disposed by the powerful trade union movement and left-wing forces.

Of immediate concern, however, is the fate of the most prominent Jews among the 150 or so in the Allende Administration. So far there is no word about the safety or whereabouts of Jacobo Schanberg, a member of the five-man Constitutional Tribunal who formerly served as the President of the Board of Deputies; Dr. Enrique Testa, head of the Defence Council who was long active in Jewish affairs and was on leave as President of the Bank of Israel in Chile; Jaime Fajovich, Mayor of Santiago; Daniel Silbermann, director of the country's copper mining corporation; Jose Berdichevsky, chief of the Chilean military aviation in the southern region; or of Volodia Tottlebaum, the Communist Party Senator.

For many Jews who were rendered marginal and obsolete in their functions as businessmen and professionals by the socio-economic changes introduced by the Allende Government, the victory of the military will be greeted with mixed feelings. Mixed because while their economic activity may once again be reassured, there is every likelihood that the Jews as a whole may be held as scapegoats by the extreme right-wing for the economic and political problems during the Allende Administration since 1970.

Committed youth

For many young Jews, especially the Zionist youth, the depositing of Dr. Allende and his government can only be a tragedy. When this correspondent was in Santiago last April on a field trip for the Jewish Telegraphic Agency he was told by several Zionist spokesmen that the Zionist youth was deeply committed to helping the Allende Government implement some of his socio-economic policies. In fact, one Zionist spokesman said, the young people are so involved that they had all but ceased "their feeling," he said, "is why go to Israel to build a new land when they can build a new society at home."

For many Jews — especially the community leaders — the victory of the military may signify a closer diplomatic rapport with Israel. Several noted confidentially last spring that the Allende forces were cooling off towards Israel because they felt that the Jewish State was a lackey of American imperialism.

In fact, one well-placed Jewish source revealed that an official of the Allende Government and one very close to the late President's political views, was asked to go to Israel to judge for himself as to whether or not the charges made by Third World, non-aligned and left-wing ideologists that Israel was an oppressor state were true. The official, the source related, finally agreed to go, but only if he was invited by the Histadrut or Mapam in order to avoid the stigma of having been invited by the Israel Government.

The upshot, the sources said, was that the Histadrut invited him and when he returned to Chile he told friends privately that he was generally impressed with what he saw in Israel. "But so powerful was the official's ingrained Marxist view, and so strong was the ideological pressure on him that Israel was indeed an outpost in the Middle East of American imperialism, that when he was asked to make a public statement about his impressions of Israel he refused to do so," the source said. "The tragedy was that he could neither tell what he saw nor could he tell the truth."

Nevertheless, the Allende Government and Dr. Allende himself, had many positive feelings toward Israel. Dr. Allende accepted the view that Zionism is the national liberation movement of the Jewish people. The government refused to provide the Arab League with the diplomatic status it had been seeking. Dr. Allende emphasized on many occasions that the pillar of Chile's foreign policy is respect for the self-determination of peoples and solution of conflict through negotiations. He many times reiterated the view that peace in the Middle East must be based on the U.N. Security Council's Resolution 242.

In addition, Dr. Allende expressed sympathy for the Soviet Jews and the Jews in Syria and Iraq. His expression of sympathy for Jews in Arab countries was especially significant because of Chile's large and affluent Arab community.

During Dr. Allende's presidency there were numerous scientific and exchange missions between Chile and Israel. Several days before the government was overthrown by the military, this correspondent received a statement from the Rabbinate in Chile which noted, among other things, the very good relations with the national Government, the Catholic archbishop, the Protestant bishop, the Jewish-Christian organizations and the University and the Chilean-Israeli Institute of Culture.

Right-wing

Despite the fact that the Allende Government was unambiguously opposed to any form of racial discrimination, the right-wing tried to generate anti-Semitism. On April 12, for example, the right-wing daily, "La Segunda," carried a highly critical article attacking Mr. Fajovich for an economic policy he was trying to institute in Santiago. The attack on Mr. Fajovich did not mention his Jewish background but it printed his name with spaces between each letter.

Strange name

The reason for this, several people told this correspondent, was to impress the readers with the fact that Mr. Fajovich's name was somehow strange. In the last few weeks as tensions mounted and an open clash between the Government and its opponents in the administration and within the civilian population became more frequent, sharper and open. More and more the pattern was emerging: Blame the Jews, especially those in government, for the social ills of the country. This pattern was predicted last spring when one Jewish leader said: "If things go well everyone will say that it was very clever on the part of the government to have Jews in leading positions. If things go badly, it will be said that it was due to the undue influence of the Jews."

Dollar devaluation dogs U.N. finances

UNITED NATIONS (AP). — The U.N. General Assembly is going into a new session dogged by dollar devaluation and declining U.S. financial support.

In an advance report to the Assembly, which opens next Tuesday, Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim says the U.N. has lost $3m. this year because cheapening of the dollars it gets in dues has raised the cost of foreign money in which it pays over a third of its bills.

Asking Assembly approval of a $513.4m. U.N. budget for the years 1974 and 1975, Waldheim estimates that it would have been $17.4m. less had there been no 1973 changes in currency rates. A state department tabulation published by the U.N. association of the U.S.A. shows that the U.S. voluntary contributions to 14 extra-budgetary U.N. or U.N.-Agency programmes dropped off from $212.6m. to $212.1m. in the last two calendar years, or from 42 to 38 per cent of the total contributed.

And the new General Assembly, in line with a resolution the U.S. pushed through the last one, will trim the assessment for support of the U.N. budget from 51.52 to 20 per cent of the total, effective for the next three calendar years.

The two Germanys will come along just in time to take up the slack. West Germany is expected to be tapped for about 7 per cent and East Germany for between 1.1 and 1.3 per cent of the total assessed against all U.N. members — which Waldheim figures will be $430.7m. for 1974-75 after deduction of budget revenue from U.N. stamp sales, guided tours and the like.

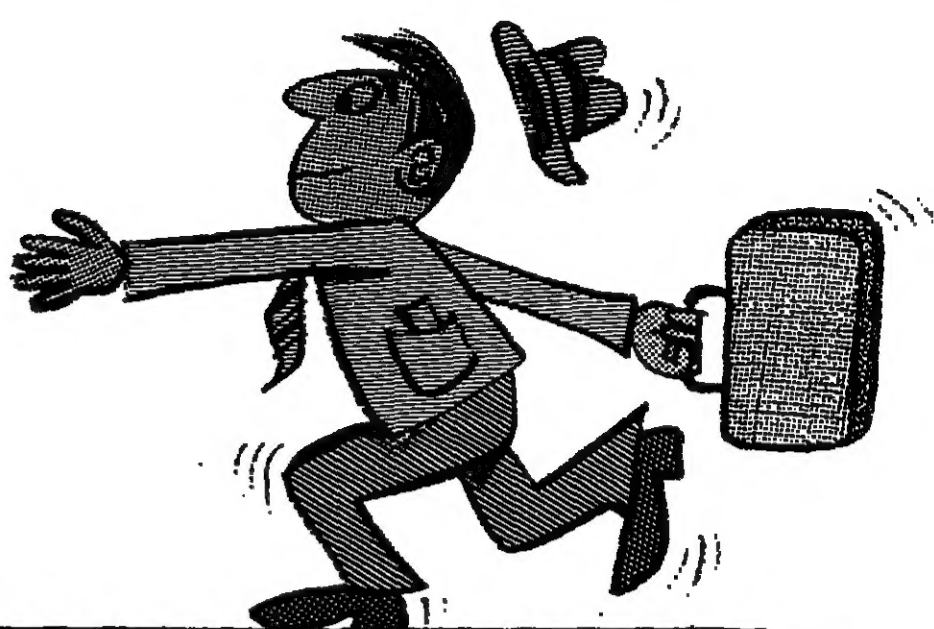

The two Germanys have already been recommended for U.N. membership by the Security Council and the Assembly will vote them on the opening day of its three-month 25th annual session. The Bahamas will become a U.N. member at the same time, making the total membership 135 countries.

The Assembly's three-week general policy debate will bring two influential world figures to its podium for the first time.

Henry A. Kissinger, long President Nixon's Assistant for National Security Affairs, will speak as the new secretary of state when the debate opens on Sept. 24, and West German Chancellor Willy Brandt will address the Assembly on Sept. 26.

MISSING THE TRAIN IS ANNOYING

MISSING THE SUBWAY COULD BE FATEFUL

There is only one solution to Tel Aviv's transportation problem — an underground subway system.

(The new Central Bus Station and the giant Netivei Ayalon project will help lighten the city's traffic burden — but they alone will not suffice.)

And there is only one mayor who can implement this solution.

There is only one mayor who can fight the Government — and win.

There is only one mayor who can recruit the largest development budgets in the annals of the State, which are needed for the planning and construction of the subway system.

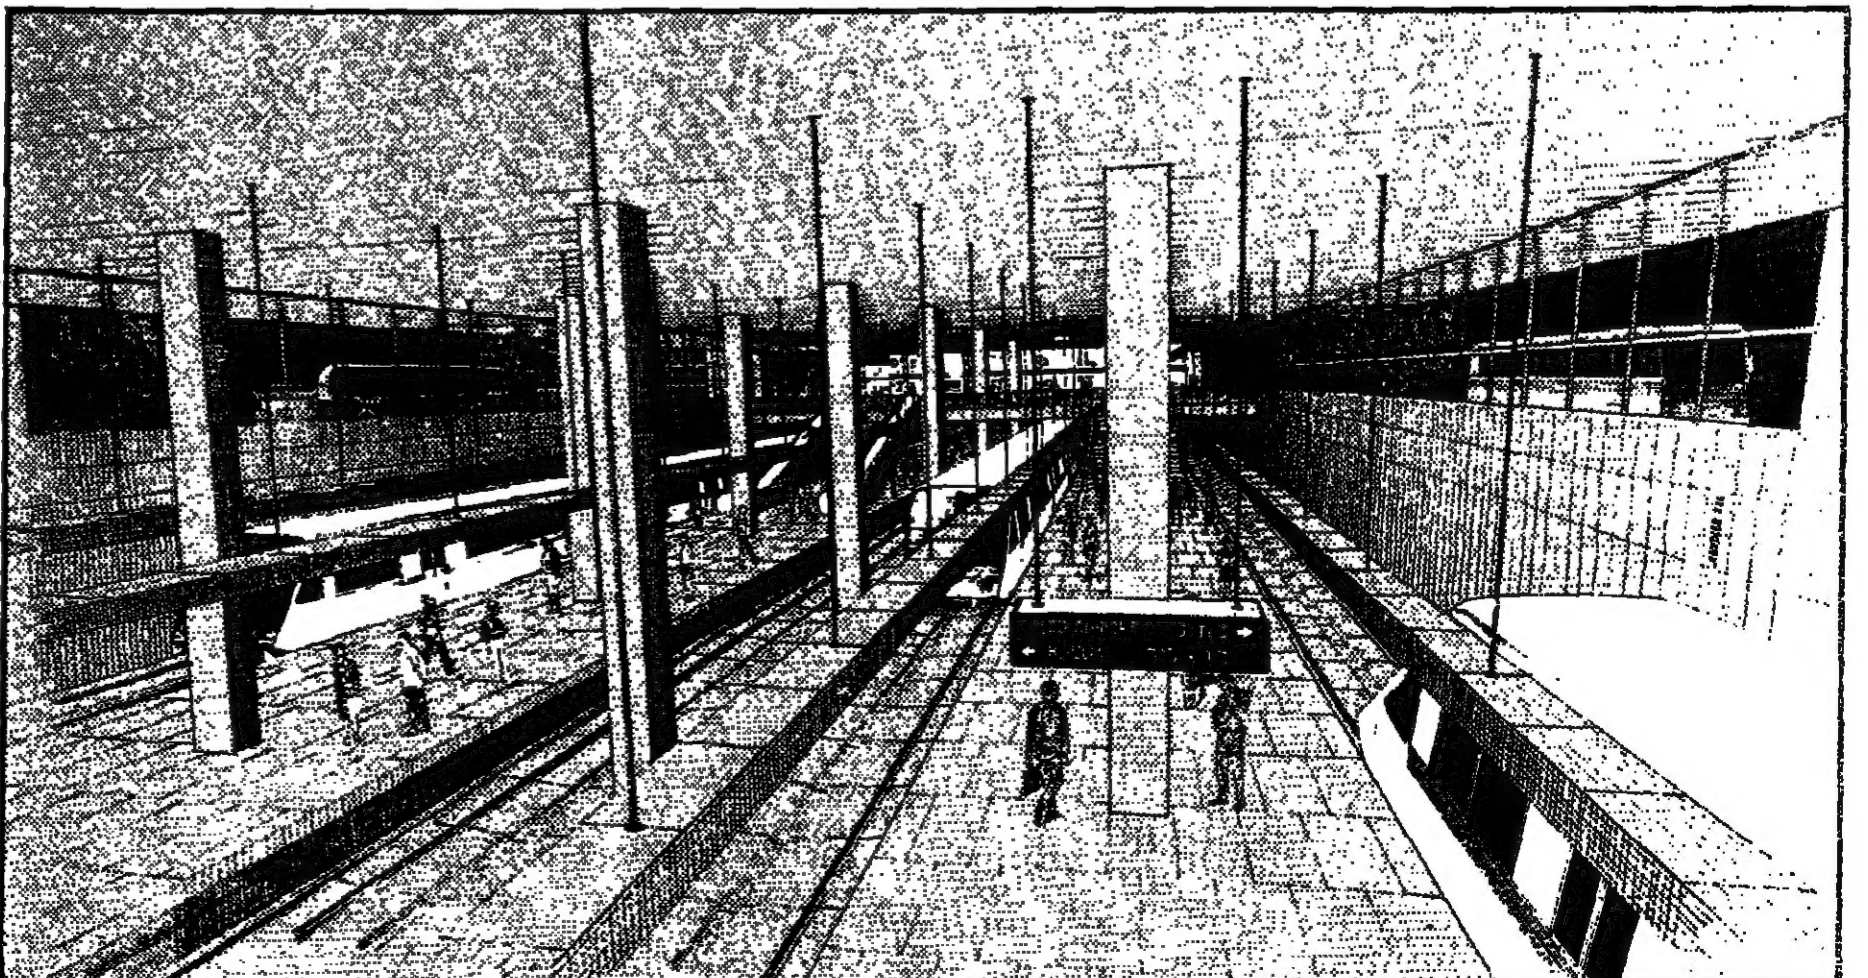

The problems are great,

And so are the solutions,

And they call for a first-rate mayor.

Only the election of Yehoshua Rabinowitz will guarantee that Tel Aviv won't 'miss' the subway.

Only the election of Yehoshua Rabinowitz guarantees Tel Aviv a subway system by the beginning of the nineteen eighties.

(This is an artist's impression of the platform level of one of the planned subway stations such as Arlosoroff (station 10), Levinsky (station 30) or Beit Eshar to change trains without changing platforms.)

A breeze of change is blowing within staid Anglo-Jewry

Something of a New Jewish Look is emerging among young British Jews and it is independent of the Establishment, according to MAURICE SAMUELSON, editor of the "Jewish Observer and Middle East Review."

RECENTLY, the main fund-raising organization in British Jewry tentatively "recognized" the State of Israel. The Joint Palestine Appeal, while still retaining that name, will conduct its next annual campaign under the slogan of "Joint Israel Appeal 1974."

This decision epitomises many of the idiosyncracies of the Anglo-Jewish community, its independence, its refusal to be hurried, and its reluctance to adopt changes merely for the sake of being fashionable. It shows that the Anglo-Jewish establishment like that of the whole country, is insular and conservative, only more so.

The J.P.A., for example, has remained an autonomous body rather than come under the aegis of the World Keren Hayesod. So too with the Board of Deputies which, after 30 years, has still not fully made up its mind about joining the World Jewish Congress.

Prisoner of past

As far as Zionism is concerned, part of the trouble is that the Federation is the prisoner of its own greatness. Its honorary officers have still not forgotten that it was to their predecessors that the Balfour Declaration was addressed, that for so many years they shared the same premises as the headquarters of the Jewish Agency, that the late Weizmann was their chairman and president, and that men like Israel Sieff, Simon Marks and Harry Secker moved among them.

In many respects, the British Federation is still a remarkable body. In the wake of Israel's independence, it was among the first Diaspora organizations to see that constructive efforts could have to be channelled increasingly into Hebrew education. It has since established 16 day schools in various parts of the country and is the biggest force in Anglo-Jewish education. Though a few figures from the past are low, the Federation set up an Israel Office to help British settlers, for which new comers from many other countries in the west have no equivalent. It publishes a weekly newspaper, the "Jewish Observer and Middle East Review."

Fund raising

On the fund-raising front, the P.A. strives for ever higher annual donations to Israel. Although targets are rarely achieved in full, the actual achievements are now several times higher than was dreamed to be possible before the Six Day War.

Nevertheless, things are changing. One of the secrets of past achievements had been the organic link between the practical and political arms of British Jewry. The late Lord Sieff, as the President of both the Appeal and the Federation, had been a source not only of money but of inspiration in the education of the young. But young people are coming to the fore. It is too soon to say whether they will succeed in shaking up the main representative bodies of the community, or whether they will assume the leadership in the future. But they certainly indicate a change which is growing strong, or all the time.

tion field. For several decades, too, both bodies were run by the same civil servant, the late Levy Bakstansky.

In recent years, though, the relationship has begun to wear somewhat thin. One consequence of this is perhaps reflected in the manner of fund-raising. Although more money is being procured at present, there seem to be fewer donors at the grassroots than there used to be. There is a greater emphasis on the techniques of solicitation and rather less on the current demands of Israel.

Ideas and politics

In the Federation, on the other hand, there has recently been a renewed interest in political and ideological matters. At the last annual conference, there were strong echoes of the debate in the Israel Labour Party over the historic questions of partition and the future of the territories. Yet the Zionists and the Board of Deputies are not the whole of Anglo-Jewry. On the issue of Soviet Jewry, the most vital forces have emerged from outside the establishment bodies. The 35 young ladies who donned veils in the middle of London on the 35th birthday of Raisa Palatnik caught the imagination of the whole of Britain. Since then other groups have been formed up and down the country. They have no opportunity to publicise the cause. Wimbledon, the Motor Show, theatre performances and even Highgate Cemetery have all received their attention. Any Soviet visitor to Britain, from whatever walk of life, is likely to be ambushed by a demonstration guaranteed to bring the press photographers hurrying along.

Private networks

The more prominent activist groups are supported by a whole series of committees, some led by non-Jews, who take up the case of particular categories of Jews attempting to leave the U.S.S.R. There is also a remarkable network of private individuals in many towns who have "adopted" the families of Soviet prisoners or other distressed cases. Their regular telephone links with them have helped to make London one of the most important centres for the collection of hot information about what is happening in the U.S.S.R.

These groups have mostly sprung up independently of the "Establishment" and sometimes out of frustration with it. Although they deal principally with this one issue, they are a sign of the new Jewishness and vitality of Britain's Jews at a time when prophets of doom say they are being obliterated by apathy and assimilation.

But young people are coming to the fore. It is too soon to say whether they will succeed in shaking up the main representative bodies of the community, or whether they will assume the leadership in the future. But they certainly indicate a change which is growing strong, or all the time.

Let THEM talk—and let US get on with the job.

ENCOUNTER IN THE AIR

YESTERDAY'S air action in which 13 Syrian planes were downed will, because of its dimensions, prompt much speculation about its cause.

Coming only a day after Syria, Jordan and Egypt ended their summit conference in Cairo, designed among other things to reopen what the Arabs call the eastern front, there will be those who will want to draw a direct link between the two events. However, even if Syria were interested in showing that it is prepared to take the lead in warming up the eastern front, which itself is questionable, it is even more doubtful that they would want or be able to plan a major encounter so quickly after the Cairo talks.

That the encounter ultimately involved so many planes was probably not part of the Syrian's original calculation. Moreover, the heavy losses they suffered occurred not merely in the first dogfight but also as a result of their attempts to interfere with the rescue of the downed Israeli pilot.

The encounter once again displayed Israel's continued supremacy of the skies. But it is also worth noting that the rescue of the downed pilot itself reflected an important factor in the making of that supremacy: the morale of our pilots.

That morale is based in large part on the deep sense of comradeship and mutual confidence which infuses the Air Force. The rescued pilot expressed this yesterday when he told newsmen he was certain, while in the water, that he would be rescued.

It should also be clear in Damascus and elsewhere that morale of this kind does not need or search out victories of the type scored yesterday to remain aloft.

Omer (Histadrut), while regretting the four per cent loss by the Alignment, says that nevertheless this will not in any way change the activity of the Histadrut. The paper thinks thirteen lists are too many, and calls for changes in the Histadrut constitution so that some of the tiny splinter lists would be barred from representation and would not receive a share of the "political dues."

Devar (Histadrut) notes that the small decline in the Alignment was not strengthened either the right or the left. In fact, the total vote of the left factions has gone down. On the other hand, the substantial gains of the ethnic lists — particularly of the Black Panthers — are cause for concern for all sections of the population, and the reasons should be analysed. On the whole, the paper is satisfied with "the stability in the basic voting patterns at the elections, which have shown... the internal strength of Israel society."

Al Hamishmar (Mapam) says the minor losses of the Alignment should not prompt Ben-Aharon to resign. On the contrary, the election results have confirmed how correct and vital the policy pursued by Ben-Aharon is, which Mapam supports. If it were not for the fighting spirit inspired by Ben-Aharon among the working public, the election results for the Alignment would undoubtedly have been far more serious. If there had been a bigger turn-out, Ben-Aharon would have received a more resounding vote of confidence. But the Alignment failed to mobilize all its forces for the election campaign and the paper says, hence the low vote.

THE PHILOSOPHER AS POLITICIAN

THE nomination of Dr. Henry Kissinger as Secretary of State is the most interesting appointment and possibly the most significant in modern American foreign policy.

He will have more authority over American foreign policy under the President than any Secretary of State since John Foster Dulles in the fifties. He is to keep an office and a staff in the White House where he has been Mr. Nixon's right hand man and to some extent his tutor on foreign policy. At the State Department he will have 12,000 officials under his control. But what is unique about the appointment is that Dr. Kissinger is an intellectual. Most of his 55 predecessors as Secretary of State, particularly his immediate predecessor William Rogers, have arrived in office and begun to think about what to do after they got there. Dr. Kissinger, on the contrary, has long held a set of firm foreign policy principles in his mind. He was at Harvard University for 21 years as student and professor. He has always been an exceptionally hard worker. He has a very strong constitution, always sleeps well and is rarely ill.

21 years of thought

For 21 years he was wholly occupied with thinking about the history of international politics, the nature of diplomacy and, especially, modern American foreign policy. Newspaper and magazine articles often refer to his studies of Metetrnich or Bismarck and write about his alleged admiration for these two skilled manipulators. This approach to Dr. Kissinger misses the point. In fact, he thought that Metetrnich's political goals were sterile and Bismarck's legacy was World War I.

Dr. Kissinger's book about Metetrnich, which he wrote as a graduate student, was an attempt to discover why Metetrnich failed. One conclusion he came to was that foreign policy was an infinitely more complex pursuit than domestic policy and that it could not be conducted independently of domestic policy. One of his reasons for seeking to end the war in Vietnam was that the United States, and particularly President Johnson, had tried to conduct the Vietnam war independently of domestic policy with what Kissinger saw as inevitable results: domestic dissension and totally confused purposes in Vietnam itself.

Dr. Kissinger is nothing if not consistent. He is a strong and highly independent thinker, intellectually self-confident in all his books and articles and now in his conduct of American foreign policy. Certain themes recur time and again. Some of these themes concern the way the United States has conducted its foreign affairs from the Dulles era onwards. He approves of very few of the State Department's activities. The hazards of the nuclear age, in Dr. Kissinger's view, give a new and crucial importance to the problems of decision-making, but the actual operation of a bureaucracy tends to become so time-consuming and the gearing-up of a bureaucracy so cumbersome, that by the time the foreign policy apparatus is finally in a position to act, the opportunity to do something creative has usually vanished. Ends and means in a foreign policy bureaucracy like the State Department are often confused. Attention tends to be diverted from the act of choice, which is the ultimate test of statesmanship, to the accumulation of facts.

Dr. Kissinger thinks more like a European than like an American and he has been consistently critical of the United States' reliance on lawyers and businessmen as foreign policy operators. American negotiators, he wrote, always behaved as if failure was attributable to personal shortcomings. The idea that a problem might be so difficult that it would not be resolved in an international bargaining session was never admitted. Lawyers thought in terms of compromises and mediation. Businessmen tended to deal with crises as they occurred and to think in terms of the personality of their particular adversaries instead of the character of the nations that the adversaries represented.

Lawyer Rogers

Secretary Rogers once said: "In handling an important lawsuit, you tell the other guy that you know you can't win all your points, nor can he, and it's best for all to reach a compromise." This artless attitude to negotiation between States exactly expresses what Dr. Kissinger has been against all these years. The task of a statesman is to think out clear purposes and aims, not simply to hope vaguely for compromises with other States. He must know the domestic background and history of the States he is dealing with and he should not be too much impressed or swayed by the character of the particular men he is dealing with.

Dr. Kissinger has thought that an absurd amount of attention has been focused on the personalities of, for instance, the Russian leaders and whether Khrushchev or Brezhnev might or might not be more interested in negotiations than other top Russians. Instead, a statesman dealing with the Russians should first make sure he knows his own aims and, second, realise that the Russians are rarely preoccupied in making a specific negotiation succeed.

Dr. Kissinger has pointed out that the Russians, like Napoleonic France, are or at least have been a revolutionary Power and that the characteristic of a revolutionary Power is that it does not accept the status quo in international politics and is instead always seeking change with demands for absolute security for itself. Revolutionary Powers, he has written, find it hard to live with situations they are not able to control. The search for absolute security by one State means absolute insecurity for all others. This is one reason why the present international system is unstable. The stability is increased by other factors, the nature of nuclear weapons, the inevitably erratic character of the policies of the developing countries, the temptation felt by many modern leaders to escape from intractable domestic problems via a risky foreign policy.

Dr. Kissinger's overriding concern has been to try to influence American foreign policy so that instead of proceeding by amateurish fits and starts it will consistently pursue the long-range goal of a much more stable international order. One of the ways he thinks this can be done is by substituting a multiple balance of Powers — the United States, Russia, China, Europe, Japan — for the dangerous bi-polar balance between America and Russia in which they have been in direct competition all over the globe and have therefore felt themselves constantly threatened even by small adjustments in the international power balance.

He is aware of the risks in his new job. The dilemma of a statesman is that he can never be certain about the probable course of events. In reaching a decision, he must inevitably act on the basis of an intuition that is inherently unprovable. If he insists on certainty he runs the danger of becoming a prisoner of events. His resolution must reside not in facts as commonly conceived but in his vision of the future. Thus it is not too much to say that the United States now has a philosopher in charge of its foreign policy.

ARAB PROPAGANDA

ANTHROPOLOGI

Deeds better than words

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post: Sir — The concern shown by Morris Driver regarding the alleged incompetence in putting over Israel's case (September 6) is surely based on subjective sentiment rather than fact. As far as Arab propaganda is concerned, may I point out the following:

1. The Arabs have unlimited funds available for propaganda and employ public relations companies.
2. They send professional "students" abroad to initiate and participate in large numbers in university debates.
3. They can afford to support numerous embassies abroad.

On the other hand, we — Israel and the Jewish communities abroad — are not entirely inactive, although always short of funds. In England, for instance, organizations such as Labour Friends of Israel, the Anglo-Israel Friendship League, the Zionist Federation, etc. most of whom work with unpaid volunteers, undertake an enormous amount of propaganda and counter-propaganda. Why then the adverse reactions and double standards applied against Israel?

The concern over oil supplies shows a willingness to give in to out and out blackmail and quite possibly is being used as an excuse or cover-up for anti-Israeli sentiments. I'm sure, to all of us living in Israel, the answer is crystal clear. It is simply that people believe exactly and precisely what they wish to believe. After all, did we not poison the wells and spread bubonic plague in Europe during the Middle Ages? Was it not the only Jewish staff officer who betrayed France?

Nothing we in Israel or the Diaspora can do, even if more competently, will change this sad fact of anti-Jewish now anti-Zionist madness that affects even some of our "best friends."

Before immigrating, I was wholeheartedly involved in putting over Israel's case. I can assure any frustrated Diaspora Jew that immigration is the best way of overcoming these frustrations. In any case, deeds are of more importance than words and, in Israel's case, more effective.

Buses for the jungles of Brazil

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post: Sir — I am a social anthropologist visiting your exciting country and would be happy if you allow me to add a few words to the argument about Egged because I think I can be of help. From what I have seen, and especially heard, the writers in this discussion seem to overlook that it is worse outside an Egged bus — with the noise and fumes — than inside. It is no wonder that people have to get inside.

But how can I help? Some years ago, I was in a team doing research into the life of the Bororo tribe, probably the tallest and sturdiest of the Brazilian Indians. They live in the Central Brazilian plateau between the Araguaya and Sao Francisco rivers. As you can imagine it is not really important in this desolate area — inhabited by an assortment of "refugees" from society as well as Indian tribes — whether the transport makes much noise. The vital thing is that supplies get
